Ten Cents
the Price for a Loaf of Bread

A DIME, ten cents, is the convenient and the popular price for a loaf of bread. There was a time, when we were at war and recovering from it, that a dime could not produce a good loaf, but that time is past. Things are different now.

The ten-cent loaf of Campbell's MERIT Bread we are baking today is a good one. It is more than that—it is a real high quality loaf. It is a wonderful loaf. It is a loaf which represents the best effort of this bread baking organization which has brought into the baking industry every aid that science can suggest in order to make bread better, more nourishing, more appetizing and purer—for you.

We have studied your interests—we have met the needs of the situation. We have done away with the 15-cent loaf of MERIT Bread and are baking only the 10-cent size which is big for the money and which we repeat is of the highest quality. We guarantee the quality and purity and we guarantee every loaf to be satisfactory.

In order to take care of the demand for an extra large loaf of special style and quality, we are baking Campbell's SPECIAL, split-top loaf, 15c.
